THE LEADING HOSPITALITY NEWS AUTHORITY SINCE 1875

A vibrant nighttime photograph of a waterfront restaurant. The scene is illuminated by warm, golden lights from the building and street lamps. Large, leafy trees frame the view, and their reflections are visible in the water. In the background, city buildings are lit up against a twilight sky. A Texas state flag is visible on a building in the distance. The overall atmosphere is lively and scenic.

4 Sustainable elements

The Spindle bed, bedside table and bench are now offered in a sustainable material that has been salvaged from construction such as housing, public buildings, bridges and more in Indonesia. Thanks to the work of skilled artisans, this wood gets a new life as contemporary furniture. Reclaimed teak has a unique character and patina, with color variations ranging from light to dark brown with bronze undertones. The material is particularly resistant and durable, ready to live on for many more generations.

5 Wine-stained woods

Vintner's Collection reuses wine-making materials from California's wine country. All of the vanities are made from straight, flat wine-stained oak staves that were used to flavor wine during the fermenting process. The submersion enhances the grain of the oak, which is then further protected with a low VOC finish. Salvaged wood is already seasoned, yielding a piece that is highly durable.

CASEGOODS

Samuelson Executive Vice President Michael Chalfin has noted a declining demand for casegoods focused on storage and an increased focus on multifunctionality, such as having a light, refrigerator, safe and wardrobe all-in-one. "Overall, we're seeing an increased demand for larger-scale, floor-to-ceiling pieces such as headboards connected to the nightstand with integrated reading lamps or TV stands built into a waterfall desk," he said. Samuelson President Lawrence Chalfin has noticed consistent demand for LED lighting that is incorporated into the casegoods themselves. "Technology integration is absolutely an industry standard at this point."
